At Christmas, large standing pies were one such dish. A record from a Christmas feast in 1394 London described spiced capon, hare, partridge, pigeon, pheasant, and rabbits with offal and meatballs in a sauce cooked with pickled mushrooms, that was then set in pastry "made craftily in the likeness of a bird's body" including a feathered tail. By the 17th century, elaborate preparations had become rare in English cookery; in the case of pies, attributed to the invention of potting meat by historian C. Anne Wilson. Despite this, the Christmas pie preparation continued to be made in the form of the Yorkshire Christmas pie, which reached the height of its popularity in the 18th century. 7f0e42a98b
