The principal architects, Clarence Stein and Henry Wright, treated each block as a single planning unit rather than the lot-by-lot subdivision typical of New York row-house development. They arranged two-story brick rows around landscaped common courts at the interior of each block. Buildings cover only 28 percent of the land, and the common interior courts alone total nearly six acres of shared open space. Frederick L. Ackerman designed many of the individual houses, and Marjorie Sewell... 723d056b0e
