Corsican wine including the island-wide designation Vin de Corse AOC. In the 18th century, the island came under the control of France. Following the independence of Algeria from French rule, many Algerian Pieds-Noirs immigrated to Corsica and began planting vineyards. The region's viticultural history can be traced to the island's settlement by Phocéans traders in 570 BC in what is now the commune of Aléria. Between 1960 and 1976 the vineyard area in Corsica increased fourfold. The majority of the wine exported from Corsica falls under the Vin de pays designation Vin de Pays de l'Île de Beauté (Country wine from the Island of Beauty). Today, Corsica has nine AOC regions including the island-wide designation Vin de Corse AOC. The three leading grape varieties of the region are Nielluccio (Sangiovese), known as the spice wine of France, Sciacarellu and Vermentino. In 1968, Patrimonio was established as Corsica's first Appellation d'origine contrôlée (AOC). Located 90 km west of Italy, 170 km southeast of France and 11 km north of the island of Sardinia, the island is a territorial collectivity of France, but many of the region's winemaking traditions and its grape varieties are Italian in origin. The expectation of the resistance groups that had withdrawn into the mountains was that World War III would break out between the British and the Americans on one side and the Soviets on the other. Under that scenario, the Soviet troops then occupying Romania would be driven out by the United States Army with help from the local resistance. Groups in Transylvania were prepared to eliminate communist officials as soon as war began, and take control of their particular region. They built supply lines with the local population, gathered armaments, munitions and money, and developed plans to attack institutions and communications networks. They were a prime target of the Securitate, which viewed them as agents of the American imperialists seeking to destabilise the regime. 472d601920
