Defensive wall Generally, these are referred to as city walls or town walls, although there were also walls, such as the Great Wall of China, Walls of Benin, Hadrian's Wall, Anastasian Wall, and the Atlantic Wall, which extended far beyond the borders of a city and were used to enclose regions or mark territorial boundaries. The walls can range from simple A defensive wall is a fortification usually used to protect a city, town or other settlement from potential aggressors. The walls can range from simple palisades or earthworks to extensive military fortifications such as curtain walls with towers, bastions and gates for access to the city. In mountainous terrain, defensive walls such as letzis were used in combination with castles to seal valleys from potential attack. Beyond their defensive utility, many walls also had important symbolic functions – representing the status and independence of the communities they embraced. A defensive wall is a fortification usually used to protect a city, town or other settlement from potential aggressors. From ancient to modern times, they were used to enclose settlements

Wall diving No special training is required, but this environment requires good buoyancy control skills for safety. It is a type of reef diving popular among recreational divers for the biodiversity of the benthic community on the one side with a pelagic community on the other, and useful in scientific diving when assessing biodiversity of a region. towing a surface marker buoy may have to stay far enough from the wall to avoid getting the line snagged on a shallower part of the wall. Decompression Wall diving is underwater diving alongside a near vertical face, usually an underwater cliff. The context is usually recreational diving, technical diving, or scientific diving on scuba. Wall dive

Non-directional markers ("cookies") are purely personal markers that mark specific spots, or the direction of one's chosen exit at line intersections where there are options. Their shape does not provide a tactile indication of direction as this could cause confusion in low visibility. One important reason to be adequately trained before cave diving is that incorrect marking can confuse and fatally endanger not only oneself, but also other divers. b12c20feac Directional line markers were originally used by non-diving cavers to indicate the direction along a guideline towards an exit. b12c20feac Existing ancient walls are almost always masonry structures, although brick and timber-built variants are also known. Depending on the topography of the area surrounding the city or the settlement the wall is intended to protect, elements... b12c20feac

Gravestone In many cultures markers for graves A gravestone or tombstone is a marker, usually made of stone, that is placed over a grave. In East Asia, the tomb's spirit tablet is the focus for ancestral veneration and may be removable for greater protection between rituals. With greater literacy, markers increasingly included inscriptions of the deceased's name, date of birth, and date of death, often along with a personal message or prayer. Fieldstones. A marker set at the head of the grave may be called a headstone. Ancient grave markers typically incorporated funerary art, especially details in stone relief. and left to naturally die off, never pulled off forcefully. The presence of a frame for photographs of the deceased is also increasingly common. An especially old or elaborate stone slab may be called a funeral stele, stela, or slab. The use of such markers is traditional for Chinese, Jewish, Christian, and Islamic burials, as well as other traditions. Many materials have been used as markers

Line marker Two adjacent arrows facing away from each other, mark a point in the cave where the diver is equidistant from two exits. Line arrows may mark the location of a "jump" location in a cave when two are placed adjacent to each other. To more securely fasten the marker, an extra wrap may be In cave (and occasionally wreck) diving, line markers are used for orientation as a visual and tactile reference on a permanent guideline. slots will allow the marker to slide along the line, or even fall off if brushed by a diver. Directional markers (commonly a notched acute isosceles triangle in basic outline), are also known as line arrows or Dorff arrows, and point the way to an exit. Arrow direction can be identified by feel in low visibility

Spector's process combined arranging, rehearsal, and mixing simultaneously. Furthering R&B recording practices learned under Leiber and Stoller, his self-described "Wagnerian" approach quadrupled the typical four-person rock band lineup, augmented by woodwind, brass, and string sections. He mixed exclusively in mono and around extreme loudness, and prominently employed ambience and echo, reverb and compression effects... b12c20feac == History == b12c20feac The stele (plural: stelae), as it is called in an archaeological context, is one of the oldest forms of funerary art. Originally, a tombstone was the stone lid of a stone coffin, or the coffin itself, and a gravestone was the stone slab (or ledger stone) that was laid flat over a grave. Surface marker buoy They may also be used to support a catch bag or fish stringer by underwater hunters and collectors. A DSMB is considered by recreational scuba divers and service providers to be a highly important item of safety equipment, yet its use is not part of the entry level recreational diver training for all training agencies, and there are significant hazards associated. Surface marker buoys are also used by freedivers in open water, to indicate the approximate position of the diver when submerged. Two kinds are used; one (SMB) is towed for the whole dive, and indicates the position of the dive group throughout the dive, and the other, a delayed surface marker buoy, DSMB or decompression buoy, is deployed towards the end of the dive as a signal to the surface that the divers have started to ascend, and where they are going to surface. Both types can also function as a depth reference for controlling speed of ascent and accurately maintaining depth at decompression stops. A surface marker buoy, SMB, dive float or simply a blob is a buoy used by scuba divers, at the end of a line from the diver, intended to indicate the diver's position.
