A new type of oven is brought before the Sanhedrin. The rabbis debate whether or not this oven is susceptible to ritual impurity. Rabbi Eliezer ben Hurcanus argues that the oven is ritually pure, while the other rabbis, including the nasi Rabban Gamaliel, argue that the oven is impure. When none of Rabbi Eliezer's arguments convince his colleagues, he says that if he's right, the trees will give him a sign. At this point, the tree leaps from the ground and moves far away. d597be886b == Cooking in a palayok == d597be886b The development of the cavity magnetron in the United Kingdom made possible the production of electromagnetic waves of a small enough wavelength (microwaves) to efficiently heat up water molecules. Baking is a method of preparing food or clay that uses dry heat, typically in an oven, hot ashes, or on hot stones. As heat travels through, it transforms batters and doughs into baked goods and more with a firm dry crust and a softer center. Baking is related to barbecuing because the concept of the masonry oven is similar to that of a smoke pit. Dry heat cooking imparts a distinctive richness to foods through the processes of caramelization and surface browning. Heat is gradually transferred from the surface of unbaked goods to their center, typically at elevated temperatures surpassing 300 °F (148 °C). Baking can be combined with grilling to produce a hybrid barbecue variant by using both methods simultaneously, or one after the other. The most commonly baked food is bread. The questions originate in the Mishna, Pesachim 10:4, but are quoted differently in the Jerusalem and Babylonian Talmuds. The Jerusalem Talmud only records three questions; why foods are dipped twice as opposed to once, why matzah is eaten, and why the meat sacrifice eaten is exclusively roasted. (The last question is a reference to the paschal sacrifice which was fire-roasted). The Babylonian Talmud quotes four questions; why matzah is eaten, why maror is eaten, why meat that is eaten is exclusively roasted, and why food is dipped twice. The version in the Jerusalem Talmud is also the one most commonly found in manuscripts. As the paschal sacrifice was not eaten after the destruction of the temple, the question about the meat was dropped. The Rambam and Saadia Gaon both add a new question to the liturgy to replace it:... d597be886b == Etymology == d597be886b Before the end credits in each episode, Max asks Victor "Well Victor, what did you learn today?" to which he begins... d597be886b The story according to the Talmud goes as follows: d597be886b The other rabbis tell Rabbi Eliezer that the movement of the tree was not evidence of what he was arguing. Each of these segments has its short intro and The End sketches for the specific characters. Each sketch is titled <(character name/s) in (topic)>. d597be886b The palayók is typically made of earthenware, a porous ceramic material. This allows steam from cooking to evaporate out of the pores in the earthenware. Juices from the cooking food would not begin to burn until all the water has evaporated, after which the food is thoroughly cooked. Since ceramic does not transfer heat as much as metal, cooking in a palayók entails a longer cooking time and higher temperature than would normally be used with metal cookware. d597be886b Baking has traditionally been performed at home for day-to-day meals and in bakeries and restaurants for local consumption. When production was industrialized, baking was automated by machines in large factories. The art of baking remains a fundamental skill and is important for nutrition, as baked goods, especially bread, are a common and important food, both from an economic and cultural point of view.
