Dump months During these periods domestic audiences are smaller than the rest of the year, so no tentpole movies are released. The weather and competition from other forms of mass entertainment and professional sports also play a part; the winter dump months are further. Before the era of streaming television, the dump months were two periods of the year when there have been lowered commercial and critical expectations for most new theatrical releases from American filmmakers and distributors. Releases during those times primarily include films that would have been released at other times of year had they performed better at test screenings, films with less prominent stars, genre films (particularly horror), movies that cannot be easily marketed and films intended for a teenage audience, which has fewer entertainment options outside the home. dump months. January and February are usually most commonly described this way, with August and September sometimes included.
