 If a stain has "set", it has become chemically bonded to the material that it has stained and cannot be removed without damaging the material itself. It is therefore important to avoid setting stains that one wants to remove. This can be done by avoiding heat (by not pressing or ironing the stain), sponging stained materials as quickly as possible, using the correct solvent (some solvents will act as catalysts on certain substances and cause the stain to set more quickly), and avoiding rubbing the stain. f60e6977d5

== Ingredients == f60e6977d5 == unions == f60e6977d5 Are there any known examples of heterozygous genetic traits subject to assortative mating, but for which homozygotes prefer heterozygous mates and vice-versa? (This would be equivalent to the same allele coding a disassortative recessive trait and an assortative dominant trait. The reason I ask is that if autism-spectrum disorders were partly the result of a partially dominant trait, then people "square enough for the peg and round enough for the hole" would more often become partners and parents of those that needed them, as I have anecdotal evidence to suggest.) Stain removal is possible due to hydrophilic end and hydrophobic end present in detergents. The hydrophilic end of the detergent attaches itself to the water molecules while the hydrophobic end attaches itself to the material and the molecules of the stain. The hydrophilic end allows for the stain molecules to be water soluble. f60e6977d5
