How It Should Have Ended began after Daniel Baxter and Tommy Watson started discussing alternate endings for a film they had watched. In 2005, their first animation "How Star Wars Should Have Ended" was completed and soon after in July 2005 the website was established. Christina "Tina" Alexander, who has previously worked with Baxter, joined the team shortly thereafter. People have suggested mechanical, energetic, physiological and psychological factors as contributors to speed selection. Probably, individuals face a trade-off between the numerous costs associated with different walking speeds, and select a speed which minimizes these costs. For example, they may trade off time...

Horses have also demonstrated narrow distributions of preferred walking speed within a given gait, which suggests that the process of speed selection may follow similar patterns across species. Preferred walking speed has important clinical applications as an indicator of mobility and independence. For example, elderly people or people suffering from osteoarthritis must walk more slowly. Improving (increasing) people's preferred walking speed is a significant clinical goal in these populations. Tourists often mimic Rocky's famous climb, which has become a physical metaphor for an underdog rising to a great challenge. A bronze Rocky statue is located at the top of the steps, and is a popular photo opportunity for visitors. The top of the steps offers a commanding view of Eakins Oval, Benjamin Franklin Parkway, and Philadelphia City Hall.

How It Should Have Ended How It Should Have Ended (HISHE) is an animated web series that parodies popular films by creating alternate endings and pointing out perceived flaws. Endings for many major films have been presented, using the tagline "Sometimes movies don't finish the way we'd like"

In a 1961 book, The Death and Life of Great American Cities, Jane Jacobs proposed radically new principles for rebuilding cities by increasing urban diversity, density, and dynamism, or in effect: to crowd people and activities together in a jumping, joyous urban jumble. While her seminal book never used the term walkability, a New Urbanism was launched. HISHE was awarded the "Best Internet Parody" award for "How Superman Should Have Ended" by Spike TV at the 2006 Scream Awards at the Hollywood Pantages Theatre in California. and was featured in an MTV Comedy and Talent Showcase at the Hollywood Improv. It has also been featured as a Yahoo! Profile Pick and has appeared in both Fade In and Wired magazines.
