== LOO Campaign == Historically, public toilets have been divided by sex since the Victorian era. Male cubicles and facilities were typically greater in number until the late 1980s and early 2010s, depending on the country and building. Current ratios range from 1:1 to 4:1 female-to-male. Unisex public toilets can be used by people of any sex or gender identity. Such toilet facilities can benefit transgender populations and people outside of the gender binary, and can reduce bathroom queues through more balanced occupation. Sex separation in public toilets (also called sex segregation), as opposed to unisex toilets, is the separation of public toilets into male and female; this separation is sometimes enforced by local laws and building codes. Key differences between male and female public toilets in most Western countries include the presence of urinals for men and boys,... appropriate personal protective equipment (PPE)". A key advantage of this method over traditional approaches is the ability to deep clean grouted areas (e.g. wall, counter and floor tile) preventing buildup of soil and bacteria in grout lines. Application of a cleaning solution followed by pressurized rinsing and vacuuming removes soil more effectively than methods that rely solely on absorbent wiping (e.g. mopping, microfiber and cleaning cloth use). In addition, studies published by the International Sanitary Supply Association (ISSA) have found that compared to legacy methods these systems potentially... In 2001 the company launched their first high speed hand dryer, known as the Xlerator. In 2022, the company claimed that its machines could dry hands in just eight seconds compared to previous models that took 35-40 seconds. Excel Dryer's products have been approved for Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) v4 credits in the United States and other green building standards. The company was originally founded in 1963, and built hand dryers from its factory in East Longmeadow. Public toilets are commonly separated by sex (or gender), although some are unisex (gender-neutral), especially for small or single-occupancy public toilets. Public toilets are sometimes accessible to people with disabilities. Depending on the culture, there may be varying degrees of separation between males and females

Potty parity Current laws in the United Kingdom require a 1:1 female-male ratio of restroom space in public buildings Potty parity is equal or equitable provision of public toilet facilities for females and males within a public space. Parity can be defined by equal floorspace or by number of fixtures within the washrooms, sometimes adjusted for the longer average time taken and more frequent visits to the washroom for females, among other factors. It is only open to women lawmakers, not the public 95a2ba14e2

Public toilet Similarly, museums, cinemas, bars, restaurants, and entertainment venues usually provide public toilets. The facilities are available to customers, travelers, employees of a business, school pupils or prisoners. Portable toilets are often available at large outdoor events. Railway stations, filling stations, and long-distance public transport vehicles such as trains, ferries, and planes usually provide toilets for general use. Public toilets are typically found in many different places: inner-city locations, offices, factories, schools, universities and other places of work and study. == Industry-specific == 95a2ba14e2 A common euphemism is otearai (おてらい; lit. "hand-washing"). This is similar to the usage in US English of "washroom", which literally means a room where something is washed, and "toilet", which literally refers to the act of self-cleaning. It is also common to see another loan translation, keshōshitsu (けしおしつ; lit. "powder room"), on signs in department stores and supermarkets... 95a2ba14e2 Parity may be defined in various ways in relation to facilities in a building. The simplest is as equal floorspace for male and female washrooms. Since men's and boys' bathrooms include urinals, which take up less space than stalls, this still results in more facilities for males... 95a2ba14e2 In 2018, Excel Dryer released a hand dryer that could be installed on top of a sink called XLERATORsync... 95a2ba14e2 == Description == 95a2ba14e2
