Travel visa Visa evidence most commonly takes the form of a sticker endorsed in the applicant's passport or other travel document but may also exist electronically. Visas are associated with the request for permission to enter a territory and thus are, in most countries, distinct from actual formal permission for an alien to enter and remain in the country. Even though travellers might not require a passport A travel visa (from Latin charta visa 'paper that has been seen'; also known as visa stamp) is a conditional authorization granted by a polity to a foreigner that allows them to enter, remain within, or leave its territory. United States by air to hold a valid passport (or certain specific passport-replacing documents). In each instance, a visa is subject to border control at the time of actual entry and can be revoked at any time. Some countries no longer issue physical visa evidence, instead recording details only in border security databases. Visas typically include limits on the duration of the foreigner's stay, areas within the country they may enter, the dates they may enter, the number of permitted visits, or if the individual can work in the country in question 4935221a4b
