Benzoic acid Typical concentrations of benzoic acid as a Benzoic acid () is a white or colorless crystalline organic compound with the formula C₆H₅COOH, whose structure consists of a benzene ring (C₆H₆) with a carboxyl (–C(=O)OH) substituent. The name is derived from gum benzoin, which was for a long time its only source. It is the simplest aromatic carboxylic acid. The benzoyl group is often abbreviated "Bz" (not to be confused with "Bn", which is used for benzyl), thus benzoic acid is also denoted as BzOH, since the benzoyl group has the formula –C₆H₅CO. sparkling drinks (carbon dioxide), soft drinks (phosphoric acid), pickles (vinegar) and other acidified foods 0f44513d7f

Kilju The ABV depends on the yeast that was used, and since it does not contain a sweet reserve it is completely dry. Crude product may be distilled into moonshine. It can be used as an ethanol base for drink mixers. It is a flax-colored alcoholic beverage with no discernible taste other than that of ethanol. However, properly made kilju will not easily turn into vinegar, lacking the nutrients necessary for further fermentation. Kilju intended for direct consumption is usually clarified and stabilized to avoid wine faults. of fermentation.
