Ulta was founded by Richard E. George, the former president of Osco Drug, Inc., and Terry Hanson. George left Osco in 1989 to develop a business plan for a retailer that would offer beauty products at different price levels. Other Osco executives joined George and Hanson in the business and raised $11.5 million in venture capital. Founded in 1990, the company was initially called Ulta3 to suggest a third option for consumers to purchase beauty products, beyond a drugstore or department store. Upon its launch, the brand opened five brick and mortar locations in the suburbs of Chicago. The name Ulta3 came from the idea to sell multiple types of beauty products in the same store. The first of the locations opened at High Point Centre in Lombard, Illinois in early October 1990. The name was changed... Occasionally, starving people have resorted to cannibalism for survival.
