In fact, this council was rare in that its composition hadn't changed in the 4 years between elections. As such, the composition of the council just before the election was as follows: fb4e109a74 In English, the term chaise longue is sometimes written as chaise lounge and pronounced , a folk etymology replacement of part of the original French term with the unrelated English word lounge. When English speakers imported a new kind of sofa from France in the late 1700s, they transformed the name 'chaise longue' ("long chair") into 'chaise lounge'—since 'lounge' is an English word spelled with the same letters and lounging is something one can do on a "chaise longue." This variant has been documented in British texts since at least 1811 and in American texts since 1824. fb4e109a74

The design was created in 1954 when a salesman for a Long Island plastics company presented to George Nelson's New York City studio an example of the company's ability to create round, 12-inch foam discs that became "self-skinned". The limited manufacturing costs made the item inviting, and designer Irving Harper was asked to design a piece of furniture around the discs. Over a weekend, Harper designed a sofa, incorporating 18 discs arranged over a metal frame. Before the election the council had been seen as a top target for the Conservatives who only needed a small swing of 2 per cent to take control. The Labour party had taken control of the council for the first time in the council's history in the previous election in 1994. The removal of mounted patrols from parks and an increase in nursery places were seen as important issues in the election. Both main parties concentrated on trying to get their vote out and were targeting several key wards. fb4e109a74 It stood as high from the floor as a chair. The two ends were identical, with a roll-over curve, more or less pronounced. The seats and ends were usually upholstered in rich fabrics. The legs followed the fashion in chairs and were square, tapered, or, somewhat later, round and reeded. Hepplewhite and the brothers Adam designed many graceful window seats, but all the cabinet-makers of the period produced them. fb4e109a74 == History == fb4e109a74 == Origins == fb4e109a74
