She was one of seven siblings. Her parents, Antonio Herrera y López de la Torre (1874-1917) and Carmela Nieto de Herrera (1875-1963), were part of Havana's intellectual circle. Antonio had served as a captain in the Cuban army during the Cuban War of Independence. After the war, he became executive editor of Cuba's first post-independence newspaper, El Mundo, founded in 1901. Carmela was a pioneering journalist and respected author, philanthropist, and feminist. Herrera began taking private art lessons from professor Federico Edelmann y Pinto when she was eight years old. Herrera attributed these lessons to her facility for discipline and for providing her with the fundamentals of academic drawing. She furthered her training in 1929, at the age of 14, when she attended the Marymount International School in Paris. In 1938, Herrera continued her education... 8689ec56f6 Víctor Hugo Ayala was born on 13 June 1934 in Bogotá. His mother was Leonor Caro.
